Stabilization Fund.

(c) The Concept says that Russia can use it to reform the global monetary and financial system to make it more representative, stable, and predictable in terms of the international reserve currency system (ibid.).[28]

(d) Russia will use the BRICS forum to strengthen the G-20 as the premier group of international economic cooperation toward its members.

(e) It will help enhance the role of national currencies. The mutual payments of BRICS countries develop cooperation in financial markets and bolster the BRICS countries' financial stability (ibid.).[29]

At the 2015 Ufa BRICS meeting, Russian President Putin tried to strive hard at overcoming the sanctions imposed by the West. Putin mobilized the BRICS members and said that all group members should help each other, as Russia is under Western sanctions and faces a shortage of foreign financing. According to him, it was causing market instability and high volatility in oil and commodity prices. He concluded that in this connection, BRICS was using its internal resources through its development coffers (Mengjie 2015). Further, during the 2019 Brasilia summit, Putin said that Russia's annual trade volume with the BRICS group exceeded the US $125 billion and grew by 22.4. Russia is ready to extend its help to the BRICS members in various areas, beneficial for all the members (Russia Briefing 2019). However, some unavoidable reasons and objectives forced Russia into the BRICS group. Russia knew they were not a superpower country; however, being a member of the UN Security Council made them one of the dominant countries in global politics. Simultaneously, for Russia, the New Development Bank (NDB) tries to meet everyday needs without anything attached. It would help mobilize Russian resources for infrastructure, sustainable development projects in the BRICS group countries and other developing countries. Notably, NDB had become an asset to solve its economic problems for Russia when the West imposed its sanctions on the Russian international trade federation (Sputnik International 2016). Russia's rouble-denominated bonds would help the NDB finance infrastructure and sustainable development projects in the new Russian Federation (Sputnik