In 2014, President Putin said that despite the end of the Cold War, there would be no natural end to it without a clear and transparent agreement on respecting existing rules or creating new regulations and standards through a well-formulated peace treaty. The impression seemed that the so-called 'victors of the Cold War had decided to pressure and reshape the world to suit their own needs and interests (Ilias 2014).' Thus, in its second point, the 'Concept of the Russian Federations BRICS Presidency in 2015–2016' entirely focused on advancing Russia's national security interests and BRICS' common security interests to strengthen international security. And the Concept also stated that:

> Russia to coordinate positions of the BRICS States on strategic stability, international and regional security, non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, settlement of regional conflicts, and the maintenance of regional stability.

Thus, Russia shifted the focus of BRICS toward global security affairs, and for this, India, China, Brazil, and South Africa also approved. Because on September 14, 2016, BRICS national security advisers met in New Delhi and discussed various security cooperation areas like counter-terrorism, the creation of cybersecurity, and energy security (Ministry of external affairs of India 2016).[43] While meeting China's Foreign Ministry, Spokesperson Hua Chunying emphatically cleared that:

> The Chinese side would like to see BRICS countries play a larger role in international and regional security issues, step up coordination and cooperation on major issues concerning security, and contribute to peace, prosperity, and stability in the world. (Embassy of the People's Republic of China in Negara Brunei Darussalam 2016)[44]

Thus, Russia's goal seemed to be coming from reality. With this shift, Russia may change the BRICS structure and its goals and objectives. Likewise, in the Xiamen summit declaration, the BRICS said that the seventh meeting of the BRICS high representatives for security issues was held on 27–28 July 2017 in Beijing. They focused on deepening the BRICS common understanding on global governance, counter-terrorism, security in
