Introduction

In the recent past, it is visible that the structure of international relations has been rapidly changing. The COVID-19 Pandemic damaged the image of China at a worldwide level. Many countries blame China for its lackadaisical approach to handling the Covid-19. Further, China's economy is declining in its annual growth. China needs a partner to revive its economy. Therefore, the chapter shall examine how China can use the BRICS resources to revive its economy in this context. It explores how BRICS is going to help in China's foreign policy. Further, the global economy transformed over the last three decades with the rise of several countries like Brazil, India, China, Indonesia, Mexico, and South Africa since the dissolution of the Union of
