1952–1978	2.97	0.11	3.45	1.55	−1.07
1978–2007	8.12	0.57	0.04	1.18	3.16
Contribution to per capita GDP growth
Period	GDP per capita	Labor participation	Capital/output	Average human	TFP
		Rate	Ratio	Capital
1952–1978	100	3.63	116.15	52.25	−72.3
1978–2007	100	7.05	0.51	14.55	77.89

Source Xiaodong (2012), Understanding China's Growth, Past, Present and Future, p. 108
Note TFP-Total factor productivity

According to the table, during the period 1952–1978, the GDP per capita was 2.97 percent, and during 1979–2007, it increased to 8.12 percent. The economy's labor participation rate was 0.11 during 1952–1978 and later grew to 0.57 percent. Furthermore, the capital/output ratio was 3.45 percent; however, it reduced to 0.04 percent from 1978 to 2007. The average annual human capital during 1952–1978 was 1.55 percent, and from 1978 to 2007, it decreased to 1.18 percent.

Shifting Chinese Foreign Policy

But, that does not mean that the West ignored China's development. The rapid growth of China's economy led to the negative projection of China in global affairs. Because no country envisaged that China would become so influential in the world's political and economic affairs, this was the game-changer in China's foreign policy. It went on to become a vocal advocate of free trade globally economy. Concomitantly, China raised its voice to reform global institutions like the IMF and the World Bank. Further, China continuously challenged the existing international order (Yongjin 1998).[6]

Integrating China's economy with the global economy was hindered by scores of international incidents and paved the way for evolving a critical understanding of China's global affairs. Another incident caused a severe blow to China's foreign policy with the West. Several incidents made China redraw its foreign policy when the United States bombarded China's embassy in federal Yugoslavia in 1999 on May 7. The US-led NATO bombed it from multiple directions. During the tragic incident, three Chinese journalists posted in Yugoslavia were hit. They died heroically, and 21