diplomatic personnel were wounded in the incident (Ministry of foreign affairs of the People's Republic of China 1999).[7] The next day, China criticized the United States by saying it violated the Vienna convention diplomatic relations[8] basic norms governing international relations. It is a gross encroachment upon China's sovereignty. Since then, radical Chinese nationalists have pressed the Chinese government to increase its military investment and take global leadership. From then onwards, China demonstrated its strength in a global society. For example, Beijing is allowed to show some 700,000 Chinese citizens against America over its demolition of the Chinese embassy (Berger 2014). That is how China's foreign policy is recurrently changing from then onward. Further, China has inculcated to take aggressive steps while engaging in global affairs.

In the 2008 recession spiraled by the West and its macroeconomic crisis, China was at the crossroads of gaining a geo-economic rise. China realized that a 'peaceful rise' was no longer relevant. Given the changing times, force and power were essential to survive during times of threat and danger to its security when Beijing began to build upon military spending and modernization of its defense apparatus and the army doctrine (Berger 2014). For example, in March 2009, Chinese legislature spokesman Li Zhaoxing announced that China was mulling to boost its military spending to RMB 480.6 billion ($70.3 billion) in 2009 (Lawrence 2009). Furthermore, in 2009 January, China released its Defense White Paper. The paper said that the overall defense budget for 2008 was RMB 417.769 billion ($61.185 billion), in 2007 it was RMB 355.491 billion ($52.064 billion), and in 2006 it was RMB 297.938 billion ($42.635 billion) (Ministry of National Defense, People's Republic of China 2009).[9] And China continuously registered an impressive growth rate during that period, when the United States was hit by the 2007 financial crisis that spread to several countries. China stood firmly at this time and registered an impressive annual growth rate. It is said that China's financial caliber could be seen as China vowed to spend $586 billion by late 2008 and contributed $40 billion to the IMF to reinforce its strength (Wang and Rosenau 2009) (Table 4.4).

Table 4.4 GDP rate of China, United States, and Japan since 2010 to till 2020

Year / Country	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019	2020
China	10.5	9.5	7.8	7.7	7.3	7.04	6.84	6.94	6.75	5.95	2.3