meeting, Chinese President Xi Jinping delivered a speech. At the meeting, Xi highlighted that China would honor its commitment to providing US $2 billion of international assistance in the coming next years. Thus it would further international cooperation in agriculture, poverty reduction, education, women and children, and climate change. China would also support other countries in restoring their economic and social development. Covid-19 reminded us that we live in an interconnected global village with a shared stake. All countries in the world are closely interconnected and share a shared future. In this pandemic time, no country can gain from others' difficulties or maintain stability by taking undue advantage of others' troubles. All countries should collectively work, rejecting any attempt to build blocs to keep others out and play a zero-sum game.

Instead, all countries should strive hard to pursue win–win cooperation and rise above ideological disputes. At the same time, China will continue to work as a builder of global peace, contribute to global development, and try to defend the global order. For that, China would support the U.N. to play a central role in international affairs. During the speech, Xi also announced that China would provide another US $50 million to the U.N. Covid-19 Global Humanitarian Response Plan. China will extend the US $50 million to the UN-FAO South-South Cooperation Trust Fund. Further, China will support opening the Peace and Development Trust Fund between the U.N. and China by five years after it expires in 2025. Another critical announcement the Chinese President made was that China would set up a U.N. Global Geospatial Knowledge and innovation Center and an International Research Center of Big Data for Sustainable Development Goals to facilitate the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.[26]

Another significant development occurred recently; China's State Council Information Office issued a white paper titled 'China's International Development Cooperation in the new Era' on January 10, 2021. The document says that South-South cooperation focuses on China's foreign policy. That is how China's development cooperation is a form of mutual assistance between developing countries. It says that China is a staunch supporter of South-South cooperation. China will actively participate and be a critical contributor to South-South cooperation. Thus it would promote joint efforts for common development (China Daily 2021). When there was a Video Conference of the BRICS ministers of Foreign Affairs on June 2, 2021, China's State Councilor and Foreign Minister Wang Yi observed that
