prosperity of group countries. He stressed that emerging economies have great potential in overcoming economic recessions and other problems. He also said that China would endorse the group's positive signal for maintaining global peace and stability and pushing forward international relations democratization. The BRICS group strives hard to improve global governance and enforce multilateralism (Mengjie 2015; Xuxin 2015).[30]

Scholars like Haibin Niu (2015) say that it is high time China regards BRICS at the political and soft power level, other than as an economic entity. It is also China's interest to use BRICS' collective voice to influence the reform and the decision-making process in major international institutions. China considers BRICS a safeguard for international peace and security by promoting cooperation in cybersecurity and anti-terrorism among its group members. And China still believes that BRICS has the opportunity to shape better world order. Furthermore, the 18th Congress of the Chinese Communist Party regards BRICS as one of China's most prominent platforms, and the country values its membership in BRICS. Along with other BRICS members, China feels that its member countries have been mistreated by West-biased institutions like the IMF and World Bank, especially where voting share and the leadership process is concerned (Haibin 2015).[31] In this context, China should become more vocal to effectively put forward global interests and push forward faster reforming international forums to become more representative, democratic, and inclusive.

Further, At the Ufa summit, Xi Chinese president, called to construct a four-prong partnership for BRICS. These are:

- Safeguarding WorldPeace,
- Boosting common development
- Promoting Diversified Civilizations and
- Strengthening Global EconomicGovernance (Miou 2015).[32]

The Chinese government is moving ahead and arguing with the rest of the BRICS to institutionalize the cooperation rather than pursue domestic reform. China firmly believes that the powerful BRICS group would help safeguard all developing countries' interests. For that, China is also spearheading the efforts to reform the global economic architecture, including pushing for reforms to the IMF's weighted voting system (Zhao 2015). That is an explanation of how Chinese leadership regards BRICS. It is