economic sanctions. They led to its isolation from the international arena after the Ukraine crisis. With this regular contact with China, Russia could finally reduce Western sanctions' impact and even get psychological support (Sakshi 2016: 206). Therefore, Russia and China would like to support this project.

Global Governance

Global governance implies a complex inter-web of institutions and processes. During its 2009 Summit, BRICS countries said they firmly believe in reforming the world's financial institutions to reflect changes in the world economy. The emerging economies and developing nations should have a more extraordinary voice and representation in global financial institutions, where heads and executives must be appointed in an open, transparent, and merit-based selection process. They said there is a strong need for a stable, predictable, and more diversified international monetary system (Kremlin 2009). Since the declarations made based on all group members like Russia and China also have the same opinion of reforming the international system. One of the critical components of Russia and China's international relations is the BRICS promotion in international relations.

The origin of BRICS was based on the need to reform the global governance system. Further, Russia and China have tried to veto several West-influenced resolutions by the United Nations Security Council. China's stand sometimes created ambiguity, but Russia was more willing to adopt public declarative stances on the Libyan and Syrian crises. China was labeled with a more conservative approach, to its earlier economic rise. The perception of threat from China is primarily created by the West (Snetkov and Lanteigne 2015). In 2016, on July 12, when the International Law Tribunal went against Chinese interests over the South China Sea matter, Russia's foreign ministry spokesperson Maria Zakharova stated that Russia would not be involved in this issue as it is an internal issue of China. But it is strongly opposing the external actor's involvement in this issue. Further, she said Russia supports the code of conduct promoted by the ASEAN and China (TASS 2016). Hence, both the countries are involved in carrying forwarding wise diplomacy policy in their bilateral relations.
