and its Russian ethnicity and culture, and Russia reciprocated to it by citing the Kosovo case. In the Kosovo case, the United States supported the principle of self-determination of Kosovo Albanians. Both in the run-up and after the declaration of independence by Pristina in 2008 (Putin 2013). In another issue in 2016, Russia immediately supported China's position on it without any condition over a Hague-based permanent court arbitration over the South China issue. However, Russia clarified that its support is legal and not political (Sputnik International 2016b). The critical matter here is that it is not only China or Russia. Other members are also not bringing any other issues which are not part of the BRICS group. They are trying to highlight the cases when it belongs to the BRICS group on a common platform called BRICS.

Brazil and India abstained from the resolution of the BRICS group members at the UN Security Council and on the authorization of force against Libyan Muammar al-Quadafi in 2011 (Nossel 2016). Another significant development took place from the Chinese foreign ministry while attending the UN headquarters on September 20, 2011, over the issue of the Libya conflict. Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi clearly stated that China respects Libya's sovereignty, independence, unity, and territorial integrity Libya, and any decision made should be based on the choice of the Libyan people. It indicates that BRICS group members are together when the situation arises.

While addressing the media after a meeting with BRICS at the sidelines of the G-20 Summit at Antalya in Turkey on November 15, 2015, the Russian foreign minister Sergey Lavrov (2015) pointed out that all countries without any double standards should think about forming a universal front to quench the terrorism menace. Before this, at the same meeting, Xi observed:

> The United Nations Charter and "recognized basic norms" of international relations must be the touchstone of devising a global counter-terrorism strategy. "The international community must join hands to step up counter-terrorism cooperation, in light of the
