> purposes and principles of the UN Charter and other recognized basic norms for international relations." (Aneja 2015)

Remarkably, this coordination and cooperation intensified after the Paris terror attack. Later, in 2016, on September 16, BRICS security advisers met in New Delhi to issue a declaration. The declaration put forward by the Indian Government Ministry of External Affairs spokesperson Vikas Swaroop:

> They deliberated on security issues such as counter-terrorism, cybersecurity, and energy security. We also exchanged views on the recent developments in West Asia and the North African region. In the area of cybersecurity and information security, they agreed to enhance cybersecurity through joint efforts by sharing the information and best practices combating cybercrimes, improving cooperation between technical and law enforcement agencies, and including joint cybersecurity of R and D capacity building. (Sputnik International 2016a)

BRICS countries also intended to establish Internet cables to avoid regular Internet traffic from the United States (Steve 2016). However, it is yet to materialize due to differences in BRICS. Sakshi (2016: 205) says that Russia and China would jointly support any military intervention in the United Nations Security Council resolutions. Both these countries vetoed six times in the UNSC. And both Russia and China are successful in coordinating with other countries in the BRICS. At the same time, both the countries advocated peaceful resolutions toward Libya, Syria, and Iran.

While addressing the media after a meeting with BRICS at the sidelines of the G-20 Summit at Antalya in Turkey, the Russian foreign minister Sergey Lavrov (2015) pointed out that all countries without any double standards should think about forming a universal front to quench the terrorism menace. Before this, at the same meeting, Xi observed:

> The United Nations Charter and "recognized basic norms" of international relations must be the touchstone of devising a global counter-terrorism strategy. "The international community must join hands to step up counter-terrorism cooperation, in light of the