challenge the United States (Panova 2016; Lo 2016). So, China has neither intended to make it a geopolitical entity nor create a new international order. Instead, it just aimed at reforming the existing global structure.

BRICS from a Security Point of View

The 2008–2009 global economic recession brought out the issue of existing international relations structures and called for a new international order. It also exposed the lacunae in security cooperation (Lukov 2011). So, over time, BRICS has been diversifying its cooperation in strengthening itself, given how vital political and security affairs were getting prominence within BRICS consultations. In this context, the below-drawn table gives a broad picture of how BRICS deals with its global issues over time (Table 5.1).

Table 5.1 BRICS Priorities in 2008–2012, percentage share of subjects

Aspects	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	Average
Economy	30.02	39	35.57	25.01	9.17	28.15
Finance	28.2	35.57	11.07	3.84	16.69	19.67
Development	6.03	4.31	14.24	6.7	7.75	7.82
Trade	5.92	7.13	4.15	1.45	18.24	7.16
Other areas	1.4	3.45	11.28	4.53	9.17	5.97
Security	16.89	1.2	3.96	1.59	2.26	5.91
Environment	3.16	4.95	4.32	7.5	11.61	4.98
Political issues	0	1.2	5.45	13.06	15.79	4.93
Energy	6.37	2.58	6.39	4.07	3.82	4.85
Health	0	0	0.00	14.41	1.71	3.60
Science and education	0	0.63	0	7.52	3.08	2.39
Crisis management	0	0	3.56	0.33	0.00	0.97
Corruption	0	0	0	0	0.00	0.00

Source Larionova (2012) “BRICS in the System of Global Governance,” pg. 41