rise from US $800 million to US$3.4 billion. The United States had already deployed 65,000 troops in the European continent. Increased funds needed to be diverted to bolster the combat brigades into the former Baltic republics and East European countries (Auken 2016).

The Baltic States have close border countries with the Russian federation. So, if war takes place, there will be a chance of speedy intervention of security forces. The United States was provoking Russia and China in a regular interval with the active installation of its defense forces near Russia and China's doorsteps. On May 12, 2016, the US and NATO members opened the missile defense system in Europe (Romania). It directly threatened Russian security (Kramer 2016). The capability of the missile defense system is:

> Ballistic missiles are powered by rockets initially but then follow an unpowered, parabolic trajectory toward their target. They are classified by the maximum distance they can travel, which is a function of how powerful the missile's engines (rockets) are, and the weight of the missile's warhead. To add more distance to a missile's range, rockets are stacked on top of each other in a configuration referred to as staging. (Reif 2016)

That is why Russia was considering it a grave threat to security. Likewise, the United States wanted to deploy the Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) System in South Korea to protect itself from the North Korean nuclear imbroglio. The first part of THAAD was installed at the Osan Air Base on March 5, 2017 (Hancocks and Berlinger 2017). The THAAD is designed to shoot down short, medium, and intermediate ballistic missiles that North Korea claims it has been testing over some time (Griffiths and Berlinger 2016). Immediately, Russian and Chinese ambassadors to the UN, Vitaly Churkin and Wu Haitao, respectively, on July 26, 2016, submitted a joint statement to the UN, signed by both the countries' presidents opposing the United States plan to THAAD deployment in South Korea (Yonhap News Agency 2016). So China and Russia see it as a significant threat to their security. Later, the sixth China–Russia consultation on Northeast Asia's security situation was pledged on January 12, 2017, to counter THAAD deployment in South Korea. The war looms over the Russian Federation as the first batch of US troops of more
