than 3500 arrived in Poland on January 12, 2017 (Zera 2017), defying Russian concerns. The second batch of around 3000 US forces had entered Norway on January 16, 2017. It was the first time the United States deployed its military forces in Norway after World War II. This is 900 miles away from the Russian Federation (Munoz 2017). So this is the intrinsic phase of relations between West and Russia–China relations. All the parties should see for bringing the possible harmony instead of exchanging war of words.

Western Media Coverage of BRICS

The evolution of BRICS is a dramatic event in twenty-first-century world politics. For several reasons, most of the world community's members, emerging markets, developing countries, and countries of transition economies have responded positively to its origin as a global forum (Davydov 2011). However, the Western media and experts have repeatedly projected negatively over the years, saying it does not have the compatibility for political and economic affairs. But, the irony is that it was West; they only coined the term of BRICS, Jim O. Neil, in 2001. However, the regular presence of BRICS growth made them project negatively in Western media. Scholar Jack A. Smith wrote in the Journal of Global Research (January 16, 2011) that the United States is increasingly frustrated with BRICS countries' growing geopolitical influence. The BRICS group's economic and political strength has only been increasing recently. It indicated in 2008 that the US' National Intelligence Council document titled 'Global Trends 2025' predicted the coming international system would change radically, where the US power will relatively decline.

Rising power nations have brought new rules and stakes in international relations, particularly by countries like those of the BRICS; it will become dominant in world affairs in the coming times. Thus, the media and the political community are tired of BRICS in the West, as there are no US or Western powers in the group. Without the West, they perceive an institution against the West (Filatov 2011). Scholar Joseph S. Nye Jr. (2013) asserted that BRICS is unsustainable due to social and economic differences among the member countries and group members who are competitive in many aspects. On November 10, The Washington Post wrote 'Rise and fall of the BRICS' (Drezner 2015). Furthermore, on November 25, 2015, Forbs wrote
