relations to enhance Russia's relations. Russia took this initiative due to various historical and sociological reasons. Karaganov (2016) observed that while economic, scientific, and technological factors massively influence world politics, regional and global power politics also greatly influence. We are witnessing today the rapid expansion of international relations. In the process, Russia and China have also played a significant role in transforming global politics. This is why it is essential to contextualize Russian and Chinese foreign policy within the BRICS, with a relatively high level of strength and stake. The reason for Russia and China is their participation and involvement in surfacing the global south voice in international relations because they have a chequered history with the Western world.

Putin on October 24, 2014, at Sochi (Russia), while speaking at the 'Meeting of the International Discussion, Valdai, said the following:

> Fundamental changes are occurring in international affairs, with an increasing loss of control. The numerous changes mean we need a new global consensus of responsible forces. Thus, it should be possible to rule out any local deal or division of spheres in classical diplomacy's spirit and anybody's complete domination over that consensus. One more reason for this is the strengthening and growth of individual regions on the planet. This gives rise to an objective need to institutionalize such extreme poles, create a powerful regional organization, and develop the rules on their interaction. Cooperation between such centers would be a serious factor of stability in global security, politics, and economics.

This trend symbolized SCO,[9] IBSA,[10] BASIC,[11] BRICS, etc. Kirabaev (2015) stated that the member countries in these groups were previously referred to as 'peripheral' and had begun to move to the fore. The 'code of behavior' within the international relations sphere had acquired new positive trends and had retreated from traditional biased norms. Kirabaev (2015) also observes that regionalism and regional integration accompany globalization, which became a significant force for the emergence of macro-regions in various corners of the world. Further, it managed to blur the categories between macro-regions and sub-regions as the economic, social, and humanitarian contact between them developed considerably. In
