Furthermore, BRICS countries started focusing on strategic affairs too. Combating terrorism became one of the most critical issues. This was intensified at the Goa summit, held in 2016 (Goa Summit Declaration 2016). In this regard, on September 4, 2016, at the sidelines meeting of the G-20 Hangzhou, the Russian foreign ministry stated that BRICS countries had underlined the importance of further strategic cooperation in the union. The Russian ministry also said that BRICS leaders exchanged views on a wide range of important issues concerning global politics, security, economics, and global management, all of common concern. Further, it is stated that strategic cooperation is based on openness, solidarity, equality, mutual understanding, inclusivity, and collaboration (Guneev 2016). Likewise, on February 23, 2017, China's state councilor Yang Jiechi stated that the September 2017 BRICS summit would be about a strengthened partnership. That is, 'BRICS: Stronger Partnership for Brighter Future. He also said that the objective of the Summit that China will focus on four aspects, which include, strengthening of solidarity and collaboration among BRICS members, the improving of global governance, deepening pragmatic cooperation to achieve mutual benefit, increasing the number of people-to-people exchanges, the enhancing of public support, and the strengthening of institutional mechanism and improving collaborative platform (The State Council, the Republic of China on February 24, 2017). The BRICS can be instrumental in shaping global governance while filling the gaps. It includes reforming the multilateral international institutions as there is a lot of hiatus between the developed and developing countries. Further, there is a lack of coordination between the regional institutions like trading blocks, regional development banks, and regional financing arrangements. There is no such mechanism in the global governance system at present. Further, there is an acute need to expand reserve currencies available in the global economy (Lissovolik 2020). For this, the BRICS have a more prominent role to play as a balancing role in reforming the ill-formed present international institutions.

Further, the Covid-19 pandemic severely damaged the liberal global order. The majority of the countries have taken unilateral decisions to contain the virus. Many Western organizations failed to bring the collective fight on the common problem of the Covid-19. However, scholar Suslov (2020) stated that the BRICS played a constructive role during the pandemic. The critical point is that India and China also tried hard to keep
