focuses on cultural, social, and humanitarian aspects. So, Russia will have a global role with it.

Another scholar Tatiana Shaumyan (2017), Head of the Center for Indian Studies, Institute of Oriental Studies, Russian Academy of Sciences, argued that:

> According to the lens of Lenin, the future of humanity belongs to Russia, China, and India. The process of world integration is essential in present global politics for solving common social, economic, political, and security issues. The RIC forum paved the way for establishing BRICS. Every year, BRICS importance is growing due to its global representation. BRICS is trying to bring regional and international issues to the mainstream level. With this trend of BRICS, can Russia have space to build close relations with these countries?

Scholar Ekaterina Koldunova (2017), Associate Professor, Deputy Dean, School of Political Affairs, Senior Expert, ASEAN Centre, Moscow University of International Relations, Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, believes that ‘Russia is the only country which is gradually trying to make BRICS as a center of new global political clout.’

However, the Ukraine crisis will be a game-changer in emerging international relations. The situation will have more considerable repercussions. The Post pandemic world is threatened by oodles of traditional and non-traditional security forces. The NATO's resources have been exhausted. The developed world is indeed at a phase where the idea of war saturates. The Ukraine crisis indicated that NATO has some limitations. Thus, the securitization of BRICS seems to be inevitable along with the BRICS Bank to defend the interest of developing countries. However, many of the Russian scholars were ambivalent about this idea; for example, Scholar Nikolai Fedorov (2017) of St. Petersburg State University stated that, > Russia needs new partners in the sphere of international security. Cooperation with India, Brazil, and South Africa is possible, but only in fields where all BRICS states have consensus (e.g., struggle with international terrorism, piracy etc.
