migration, and much more (Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Russian federation 2013: 6–7). Traditional IR paradigms such as neo-realism and neo-liberalism also contribute to the rise of the BRICS group. These theories mostly assert the material interests of the states. According to many international organizations and respective government statistical reports, all BRICS countries have military might and economic strength, which I have explained in the following passages and chapters (Fig. 2.1).
