Geography also has great importance in world politics. Fig. 2.3 illustrates BRICS countries' share in the global territory, which is 6 percent: Brazil, 13 percent: Russia, 3 percent: India, 7 percent: China, and 0.9 percent: South Africa, which implies cumulative contribution to the global territory as 30 percent. The rest of the world's share is 71 percent.

BRICS Economic Strength in Global Economy

The critical aspect of the BRICS group is that due to their domestic solid demand-driven growth model. For example, India and Brazil. At the same time, significant outward linkages of China and Russia. Further, South Africa benefits from its large resource base and proximity to the untapped growth potential of the African continent region (Observer Research Foundation 2017, p. 68).[12]

The research says that BRICS group countries will dominate the future of international relations for several reasons. The tables and figures give a positive picture of BRICS's rise in the global economy. The critical aspect of these group projections is they are published by international institutions like World Bank, IMF, OECD, and many other global institutions. A slew of renowned scholars of international relations predicted positively about the BRICS group's role in
