inter-regionally, and they only can create a new international order.

- All BRICS countries have the same ambition to become influential global powers.
- The countries have hastened the cooperation among these countries regionally and inter-regionally.
- These countries have some sort of unique differentiation of their own within the governments of emerging nations.

The inability of many scores of other global bodies to handle the world's political and economic affairs made these five big countries come together to reform them. The uniqueness with BRICS is the transcontinental representation, unlike other groups. It is a global body with a global agenda (Akulov 2012). As far as current trends in the East and West are concerned, they are always in a puzzle with one or the other. Nonetheless, things have changed, be it the Korean issue, the South China issue, or the other global issues like the Afghanistan crisis. The rise of BRICS as a global group will remain a balancing factor for future international relations among the southern and Western world (Guerrero 2011). Ever since the beginning of the twenty-first century, the balance of power in international relations has changed with the rise of BRICS countries. It is understandable that these countries naturally challenged the dominance of specific forces in the global decision-making processes (Akulov 2012).

The BRICS group got international fame with their active involvement in global affairs. It was mainly during the 2011 UN Security Council meeting to pass Resolution Number 1973 over NATO's bombing of Libya. During that time, Brazil, India, China, and Russia abstained from vetoing the decision in their solidarity as BRICS members, while South Africa was the only one to accept it (United Nations Security Council 2011). Thus, BRICS has been surfacing its voice on copious global affairs with unison and intensifying its unity through regular intervals and conventions. In a way, BRICS is a beacon for Russian and Chinese foreign policy interests. Every year, BRICS meetings take place amid new and existing global issues. For instance, in 2012, New Delhi, where the basic theme was 'BRICS Partnership for Global Stability, Security and Prosperity,' dealing with Iranian Nuclear issues and Afghanistan (Ministry of External Affairs of India 2012). And in the Durban Summit in South Africa, in which BRICS countries declared that the international community should reject further militarization of Syria because the problem could be resolved through formal dialogues only (Ministry of External Affairs of India 2013). Likewise, in every BRICS summit, the global issues will be dominated in the majority of the discussion of the BRICS summit. For instance, The Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the BRICS group met on June 1, 2021, via Video Conferencing on the landmark occasion of the 15th anniversary of the BRICS. The Ministers reaffirmed that the BRICS countries
