made references toward the reforming of international institutions from 2008 through 2012.

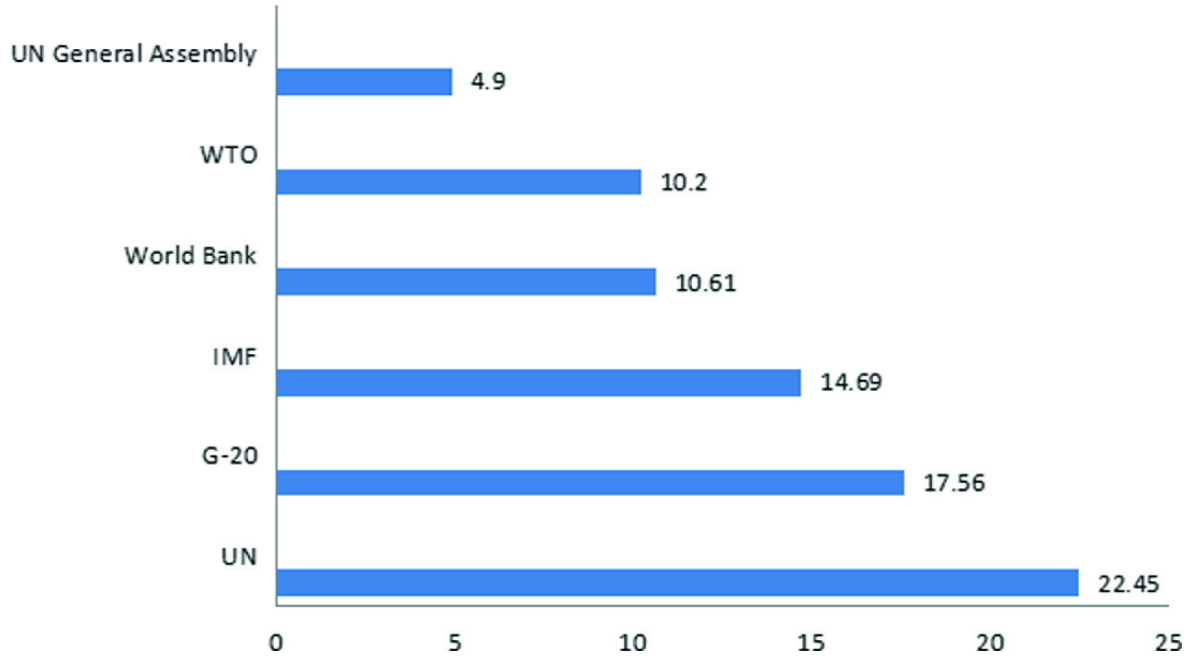

Fig. 2.6 BRICS references to international institutions, 2008–2012, percentage share of references made (Source Larionova 2012, BRICS in the System of Global Governance, p. 42)

The figure explains that during its meetings, BRICS countries made references to the UN 22.45 percent of the time, 17.56 percent of the time to the G-20, 14.69 percent of the time to the IMF, 10.61 of the time to the World Bank, 10.2 percent of the time to the WTO, and 4.9 percent of the time to the UN General Assembly. It indicates how BRICS is trying to reform the global institutional structure.

Therefore, the BRICS must strive for a new global order based on exclusivity, principles of inclusivity, the indivisibility of security for all, cooperative and sustainable security behavior, and sovereign equality of all states of global politics. It should also try to connect peace, security, and development. It should also strive hard to establish an international system based on the supremacy of international law and norms rather than force (Observer Research Foundation 2017, p. 68)[18] because the BRICS can become a hub for global political economy in ensuing international relations. The BRICS Think Tanks Council in 2017 argued the BRICS members to increase the collaboration of the BRICS hitherto neglected areas. The BRICS countries are located in different parts of the planet. They are closely interconnected through ocean sea-lanes and routes. The fact is that about 80 percent of the global trade takes place by Sea. Therefore, the BRICS members may increase the relations over the oceans to strengthen the collaboration.[19] At the same time, the BRICS group can grow in Research and Development (R & R&D). Scholars Sokolov, Shashnov, and Kotsemir (2021) research said that except for