Finally, China and Russia indeed have antagonistic political relations with the United States. However, India has a different perspective on this issue. Apart from that, India has invested heavily in India–US relations and participated in various groups the United States has initiated. Considering this, India may not feel okay with any diatribe against the US role in international relations. Therefore, the success of the BRICS depends on the bilateral relations the BRICS group will have (Rajagopalan 2020).

Conclusion

This chapter explains how BRICS came about to be established and the history that led to its evolution, first through the nation-state's emergence and then from the transformation of a bipolar to multipolar world order. It further discusses how the third world countered the uni-polarity of the American cultural hegemony and domination in establishing alternate institutions and security systems, particularly BRICS. The chapter goes into the history of polarity and focuses on multipolar world order in international relations. Later, the chapter stressed the theoretical background of multipolarity. It illustrated the Russian and Chinese versions of multipolarity and their cooperation over a multipolar strategy in international relations. Again, it explained how world politics changed after the disintegration of the Soviet Union. The chapter dealt with the changing dynamics of international relations and rising power nations, developing national contribution to the global economy.

Finally, the chapter discussed the theoretical orientation of BRICS. It explained the basic information about BRICS, its commerce, health, education, social, and economic indicators. This chapter also expounded BRICS financial strength, BRICS's contribution to global trade, and its GDP. It stressed how BRICS countries' positive growth rate would surpass countries in business and economy shortly. It has been illustrated with pertinent institutional data. The chapter also describes the role that BRICS has played on global issues, global governance, and BRICS' stand on specific international issues. Finally, the chapter ends with a systemic explanation of BRICS summit declarations since 2009 and up to 2021.

According to the analysis of the above passages, it has been proven that the BRICS will be the critical center of world politics in the upcoming international relations arena. Notably, it indicated the growing multifaceted cooperation between group countries despite their bilateral relations sometimes causing trouble in the group coordination.
