Introduction

The disintegration of the Soviet Union in 1991 is a significant incident in recent history of Russia. Since then, Russian foreign policy got drastically changed. The foreign policy became rudderless. Further, Russia had to face copious domestic and international challenges. However, after Primakov's affairs, the Russian foreign policy gradually tilted toward Global South. While moving toward the global south, Russia encouraged third world countries to be vocal on various global issues. While collaborating with the Global South, Russia nudged the global south countries to be part of international and regional organizations. Thus, they would resolve common concerns and problems effectively. The best example in this regard is BRICS and SCO. After that, Russia is actively participating in those organizations. Specifically, the BRICS has been getting much attention from Russian foreign policymakers. The reasons are many due to the colossal impact of the BRICS in the subsequent international order. In this regard, the chapter will explore how Russia became part of the BRICS. The chapter expounds on the essential strategies of Russia to be part of the BRICS. It also explains how the BRICS will help the Russian foreign policy objectives.
