State University stated that, ‘SCO is a regional organization dealing with a relatively close circle of problems. BRICS has a more global character, a forum of regional powers, pretending for a more significant role in world politics, “alternative” to G-7.’

That is the way Russia emphasizes more on the BRICS group. Apart from that, the BRICS political sway emerged because its member states are reputable members of other leading international organizations and entities, such as the UN, G-8, G-20, the Non-Aligned Movement, the group of 77, and so on. Furthermore, these countries are also part of several other regional organizations and associations (Concept of Participation of the Russian Federation in BRICS 2013). Particularly, since the Ukraine crisis onwards, the relations of Russia and the West have been continuously straining. Therefore, it has led Russia to reorient its focus toward non-Western institutions and cement its place with other like-minded nations. Apart from that, Russia initiated the Eastern Economic Forum (2015), extending the Eurasian Economic Union (EAEU) (Kapoor 2020). For instance, the Supreme Eurasian Economic Council is the highest supranational body of the Eurasian Economic Union. It is composed of the Heads of State or Government of Members States of the EAEU decided to extend its trade agreements with more countries sooner or later (Devonshire-Ellis 2021). Russia introduced the ‘Greater Eurasia’ project (2016) (Kapoor 2020). Russia is also actively involved in various global and regional organizations like the SCO, BRICS, G-20 to enhance its foreign policy and strive hard for a multipolar world order in international relations. However, Russia is giving more importance to the BRICS group due to BRICS potential and continental representation.

The USSR Disintegration

After the USSR's disintegration, the United States remained without a competing power in equal scale or strength. Till the beginning of the twenty-first century, US power had gone beyond that limit. Hence, Washington believed that the world was moving toward a ‘single superpower’ long reign. Further, under George W. Bush's Presidency, the United States had over-exerted itself to consolidate the unipolar system of world affairs (Rogov 2014). They remained the most powerful, while the rest of the Western European countries, and Japan, became second fiddle
