TWO WORLDS, ONE ROOF

Sonakshi Sinha and Zaheer Iqbal's Mumbai Sanctuary, Sa'ada transforms a cluster of apartments into a unified, high-design layout

When we first sat down with Sonakshi Sinha and Zaheer Iqbal to discuss the brief for their new home, we were instantly struck by something far deeper than their aesthetic preferences. Here were two people with completely different personalities, contrasting habits and entirely unique ways of experiencing the world around them. Yet, what shone through was the profound mutual respect they held for those differences. Neither individual wanted to change or compromise the other's identity. Instead, they shared a singular, beautiful vision: to create a home where they could celebrate their individuality while building a unified world together.

For us, this project was never about chasing temporary interior trends or assembling generic luxury catalogue pieces. It was about translating that emotional synergy into physical form. We asked ourselves a fundamental question that became the bedrock of the entire architectural process: How do you design a luxury home where visual contrast does not become spatial conflict? The answer materialised as Sa'ada—a name representing happiness and prosperity—a residence where two distinct design languages flow
