

DYNAMIC DISPLAY
(clockwise from top) Divya Singh sits on top of a bespoke bar unit; the rug library; custom art and furniture; specially curated wardrobe and vanity

in the typical classrooms of interior schools, but rather on the business side of a New York-based luxury carpet corporation back in 2009. It was during those formative years, navigating design boardrooms in Hong Kong and Bangkok and watching raw materials transform under the skilled hands of weavers in Banaras, that she fell deeply in love with the actual anatomy of design. By the time she stepped out as an independent entrepreneur in 2013, she had come to realise that the disparate elements of a home (rugs underfoot, panelling on the walls, structural lines of the cabinetry) could no longer exist as isolated chapters; they needed to be bound together into a singular, flowing narrative.

The genesis of Zynaty Living, a name that translates to 'master of your own destiny', serving as much as a spiritual anchor for Singh as it does an empowering mantra for her in-house production team, sprang from a profound sense of frustration with the