

FEEL AND LOOK GOOD
In these bath spaces (far left and left) designed by Studio IAAD, where drama and design go hand in hand; bathroom concepts (below left and right) by TOTO are crafted keeping wellness in mind

Photograph by STUDIO NOUGHTS & CROSSES

2. Wrap the Senses with Integrated Steam Generators
To turn a shower into a true thermal cabin, steam is non-negotiable. An integrated steam generator warms the enclosure from the inside out, opening up your pores and clearing the mind. For us, steam is the ultimate canvas for aromatherapy. By introducing a mechanism to infuse the steam with pure eucalyptus or lavender oils, the air itself becomes a tactile layer of comfort.

3. Precision Body Jets
While rainfall showerheads focus on the atmosphere, body jets focus on physical release. Strategically flush-mounted at muscle-trigger points along the walls, these low-profile jets deliver targeted hydrotherapy. They can be dialled from a soft mist to a firmer pulse, working out physical tension while keeping you completely enveloped in warmth.

4. Anchor with Built-in Stone Seating
A sensory shower isn't a place you want to stand. Incorporating a monolithic, built-in stone bench completely changes how you interact with the environment. It transforms the shower from a task into a destination. Whether it's carved from a single block of quartzite or textured limestone, a heated bench offers a physical place to sit, breathe, and let the steam do the heavy lifting.

Ultimately, a wellness-focused bathroom steps back from loud, visual displays to prioritise how a space makes you feel. By combining water, heat, stone and air, it the bathroom becomes a sanctuary.