

GURUSPEAK

"IIMC's programmes are regularly updated to produce industry-ready media and communication professionals. Many of our professors come from the industry, bringing practical expertise that complements a strong grounding in theory"

PRAGYA PALIWAL GAUR
Vice Chancellor, IIMC, New Delhi

No.1* Indian Institute of Mass Communication (IIMC) New Delhi

CHANDRADEEP KUMAR

AIME is part of a broader expansion underway at the institute. Over the past year, IIMC has launched PhD programmes for full-time and part-time scholars and established an Incubation Centre to support student-led media ventures through mentorship and seed funding. Together, these initiatives signal a shift from preparing students solely for existing industry roles, to encouraging research, innovation and entrepreneurship.

The institute has also expanded its academic offerings. MA programmes in Media Business Studies and Strategic Communication, introduced two years ago, are attracting growing interest among students seeking advanced training in media and communication. At the same time, IIMC's legacy postgraduate diploma programmes, including English Journalism and Advertising & Public Relations, continue to draw students looking for a direct pathway into newsrooms, agencies and communication roles.

"Our programmes are designed to train media and communication professionals fit for the industry," says Vice Chancellor Pragya Paliwal Gaur. "The best part of the pedagogy here is an interesting mix of industry experts and academicians." Many faculty members bring professional newsroom and industry experience to the classroom, combining practical insights with strong academic grounding. "The IIMC curriculum is regularly updated to accommodate the changing trends of the media industry," she adds.

That philosophy is increasingly relevant in a sector being reshaped by technology. Through the AIME Academy and its Incubation Centre, IIMC is encouraging students not merely to adapt to disruption, but to help shape the future of media itself. ■

STUDENTSPEAK

"The biggest takeaway for me is the close interaction with practising journalists. Instead of just learning theories, we learn in an environment that closely resembles a real newsroom"

AKSHAT AYUSH, PG Diploma, English Journalism

*The college that has topped the overall rankings with the highest score