first year, there is a risk that design sensibilities may not fully develop, "blurring the distinction between a layperson using AI and a professional designer applying it with expertise".

Fashion design, says Tanu Kashyap, director general-NIFT, remains NIFT's flagship programme and, for over 40 years, has shaped generations of successful designers and professionals. "We continue to set the standards that inspire design schools across India and reassert NIFT Delhi's position as the undisputed leader in fashion education," she says.

Industry engagement is another one of the institute's defining strengths. Beyond placements, students benefit from regular interactions with industry leaders through lectures, projects and sessions that expose them to real-world challenges and opportunities.

A recent initiative is its student-driven placement cell. Senior students play an active role in engaging with industry partners, reaching out to organisations and creating opportunities for
