VINFAST

INDIA TODAY GROUP

POWERED BY AutoToday

Electrifying Delhi INDIA

Delhi is a magnificent, disjointed trilogy: the ancient soul of Shahjahanabad, the clinical, imperial architecture of the British Raj, and the multicultural energy of the modern metropolis

To understand Delhi, you must first accept it as a geographic palimpsest where successive empires wrote over predecessors. Navigating this identity crisis requires an exceptionally compliant suspension and a passenger seat occupied by Anubhav Sapra of Delhi Food Walks, a walking encyclopedia of calories tracing history via flavours. Our culinary exploration began in the claustrophobic labyrinth of Old Delhi, Shahjahanabad. Its fluid human and auto rickshaw brimmed rivers would be a complete nightmare in a conventional petrol car, but the silent, electric VinFast VF7 acted as a rolling sensory vacuum. We glided through Mughal chaos, entirely detached from the auditory assault outside. Our first tactical stop was Vaishnav Chat Bhandar. Delhi chaat is a rapid fire chemical reaction of sweet, sour, crisp, and spice. Their pani puri is a masterclass in structural integrity, and the smooth dahi bhalla balances sharp ginger. This legendary spot even boasts the Delhi Chief Minister's official stamp of approval.

