TRADING AND TECHNOLOGY: HOW INNOVATION IS DRIVING INDIAN BOURSES

"We use AI for surveillance, pattern recognition, and programming, but not for trading because it requires deterministic outcomes. We have 26 crore accounts and cater to 25% of India's households"

"Mythos is a marketing myth created by Anthropic. Large organisations have created layers of security, so Mythos has not been able to find the vulnerabilities in the operating systems"

Few venues better symbolise India's financial ambitions than the National Stock Exchange (NSE). It was there in Mumbai that the second edition of the India Today Smart Money Financial Summit unfolded on June 18, coinciding with the "truce" between the US and Iran, and reports that the NSE was preparing for what could become the country's second-largest initial public offering.

However, the renewed tensions in West Asia have reinforced the need for investors to brace for uncertainty. Ashishkumar Chauhan, MD & CEO, NSE, set the tone for the event by emphasising the power of technology and why the Mythos scare should prod organisations to be more prepared for tomorrow. Niranjan Hiranandani, founder and chairman, Hiranandani Group drew an optimistic picture of the real estate sector, which has opened up new avenues to investors through the real estate investment trusts (REITs). But the big concern was in affordable housing where sales had fallen 20 per cent.
