

KANSAS CITY

Rocky Mountain High

Once the crowds thin and the noise dies down in Kansas City, take a flight to Denver to board the luxury train, the Canyon Spirit, which winds past the majestic Rockies of Colorado and the Red Rocks of Utah. Over the next three days, it may be difficult to peel your eyes away from the ever-shifting landscape of America's southwest. Traverse the dramatic Continental Divide past the gushing Colorado river, Alpine forests and canyons before reaching Glenwood Springs for an overnight hotel stay.

On day two, the geography shifts to the red rock desert sculpted with rugged mesas, towering canyons and stone arches. As the train heads to Salt Lake City on the last day, the desert shades transition to green as it ascends the Wasatch Mountains.

LOS ANGELES

Bliss out

After the match in Los Angeles is over, hop on to a one-hour flight to Las Vegas to one of America's most exclusive wellness escapes, and then drive to the luxury retreat, Amangiri, in Southern Utah. Wrapped in the stillness of the vast desert, check into one of its sleek suites, a six bedroom villa that only opened this April or the tented pavilions to tick all the boxes for rejuvenating the body, mind and soul. Immerse yourself in sound healing, meditation or breathwork; take a mindful walk or a guided hike in the midst of 200 million old brooding mesas or stargaze under impossibly clear skies. The extensive menu at the massive 25,000-square-foot spa, incorporates healing therapies from the ancient Native American culture. In summer, the focus is on water wellness with therapies like Aqua Shiatsu and floating guided meditation. You'll return rejuvenated.
