

Q. Do you feel comfortable changing your mind after initially consenting to physical intimacy?

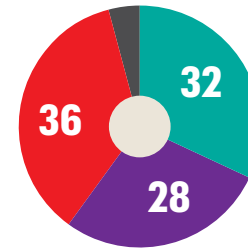

- Yes, and my change of mind is respected
- Yes, but it creates tension or pressure
- No, I feel once I say 'yes' I must continue
- I have never tried to withdraw consent
- Not applicable

36%

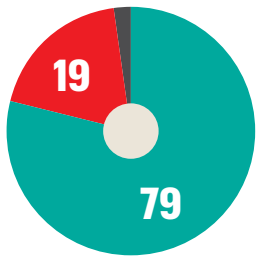

feel comfortable changing their mind after initially consenting to physical intimacy

Q. When you feel pressured to 'go along' to keep peace or fit in, do you think it is still considered as your consent?

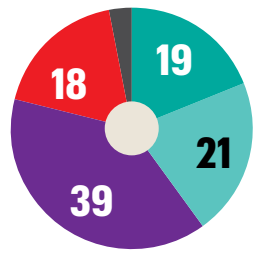

- Yes, it is still considered as consent even though the consent was given under pressure
- Yes, it is still considered as consent and pressure is part of real-life relationships
- No, it is not considered as consent

Q. Do you agree with the statement 'no means no, under all circumstances, without exceptions'?

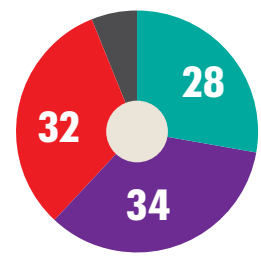

Yes No

Q. When you say 'no', do you feel expected to explain and justify it?

- Yes, always
- Yes, often
- Yes, sometimes
- No, never

Q. How do people around you generally view a woman who withdraws consent mid-situation?

- Reasonable and justified
- Confusing or unfair
- Manipulative or dramatic

Graphics by TANMOY CHAKRABORTY

Rest, DK/CS); all figures in %