CONSENT, CHOICE AND THE LIMITS OF LOVE

Q. Who do you believe holds greater responsibility in ensuring consent is respected?

- The person initiating
- The person consenting
- Both parties equally

Q. How often do people seek your permission, verbally or non-verbally, before everyday actions such as borrowing personal items, hugging you, or entering your personal space?

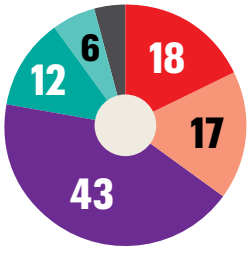

- Always
- Often
- Sometimes
- Never

29%

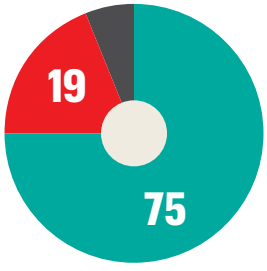

say people seek their permission, before borrowing personal items, hugging, or entering personal space etc.

Q. If you did not speak up after feeling uncomfortable or pressured, what was the main reason?

- Thought nothing would change
- Didn't want to be judged
- Wanted to keep peace
- Family/workplace conditioning
- Felt exhausted or helpless

Q. Do you feel that when a woman assertively refuses advances or sets boundaries, society labels her negatively—e.g., calling her 'difficult', 'arrogant', or 'too modern'?

- Yes
- No

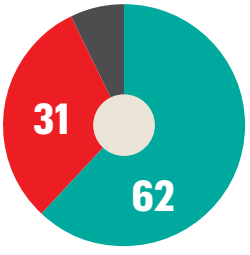

75%

feel when a woman assertively refuses advances or sets boundaries, society labels her negatively

Q. What do you most associate intimacy with?

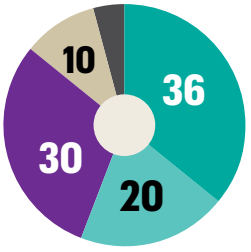

Emotional connection—feeling understood and emotionally close	48
Deep trust and vulnerability	41
Open and honest communication	41
Mutual respect and acceptance	30
Shared experiences and bonding time	27
Physical affection—touch, closeness	22
Feeling prioritised	19
Intellectual or spiritual connection	14
Sexual connection	13

Q. Is it acceptable to ask for consent repeatedly in a relationship?

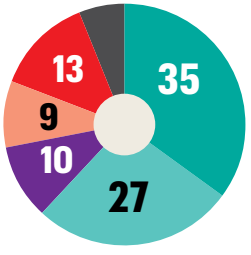

- Yes, it's respectful
- No, it shows mistrust

Q. How do you mostly understand 'consent' in an intimate situation?

- It must be explicitly said
- Non-verbal hints and gestures can also signal consent
- It depends on the situation or understanding between people
- Consent can be implied if the other person doesn't resist or says 'no'

Q. When it comes to your physical intimacy with a partner, which best describes how consent is usually established?

- We discuss and explicitly agree before engaging in intimacy
- It's usually non-verbal understanding; we can tell if both are comfortable
- I often let my partner lead, if I'm unsure about consenting
- There isn't a clear process, things just happen without explicit discussion
- I don't have/haven't had a partner