Q. If a male colleague or boss insists on something that crosses your boundaries—e.g., a lingering handshake, an unwanted shoulder pat, or personal favours beyond your role—what would you most likely do?

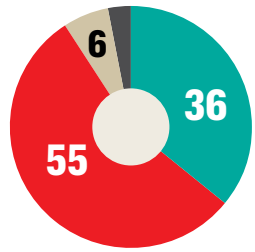

- Tell him directly that it makes you uncomfortable
- Convey dissent through non-verbal or subtle reaction
- Politely excuse yourself or find a way to dodge it
- Report it to a higher authority or HR
- Keep quiet and tolerate it to avoid workplace conflict or retaliation
- Not applicable

Q. Do you feel you can comfortably refuse work-related requests that make you uncomfortable—e.g., working late with a male colleague when alone, attending off-site meetings that feel unsafe?

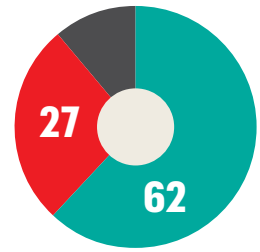

- Yes
- I can refuse, but I worry about negative consequences for my job
- No
- Not applicable

Q. Have you ever experienced a situation where someone in a position of authority ignored your lack of consent and proceeded despite your discomfort or refusal?

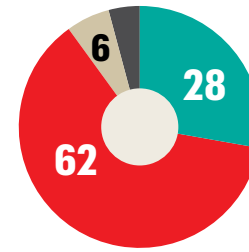

- Yes
- No
- Not applicable

Q. Before someone—friend or family—posts a photo or personal information about you online, do they usually ask your permission?

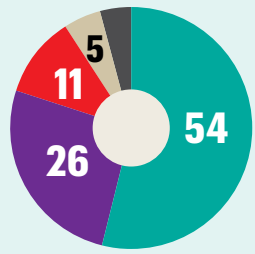

- Yes
- No

Q. Have you ever received unwanted explicit images or sexual messages from someone online—via WhatsApp, social media DMs?

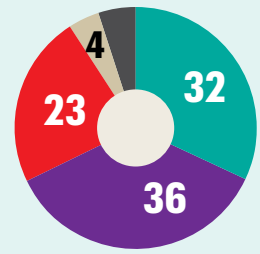

- Yes
- No
- Not applicable

Q. How would you rate the culture in your workplace regarding respect for women's personal boundaries—e.g., personal space, comfort with touching or comments?

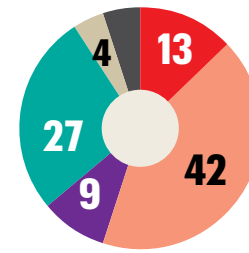

- Respectful and protective with proper policy
- Have policies on paper but not implemented
- No policy and not respectful
- Not applicable

Q. Does your workplace or industry provide training or clear policies about consent, harassment and respecting boundaries—for example, workshops or guidelines on appropriate behaviour?

- Yes
- There are policies or trainings, but they're mostly formalities and not impactful
- No, there is nothing specific provided on these topics
- Not applicable

Q. If someone harasses you online or behaves inappropriately, such as sending unsolicited or obscene photographs and messages, what are you most likely to do?

- Clearly tell them to stop
- Block or unfriend them
- Ignore the messages and not respond
- Report the person to the platform or authorities if it's serious
- Not applicable

Rest, DK/ CS; all figures in %