Q. As a child, were you ever taught or spoken to at home or in school about 'good touch' and 'bad touch'?

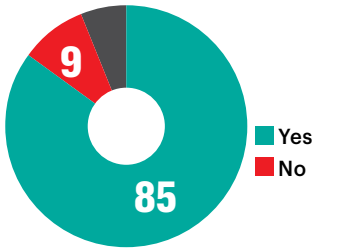

Q. Should consent education be mandatory in Indian schools and colleges?

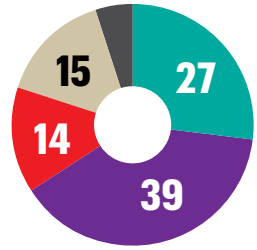

Q. At what age do you think people should start learning about consent?

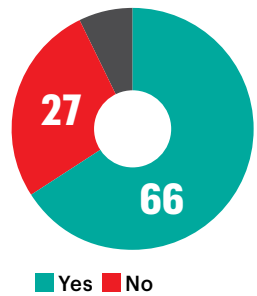

Q. Will you teach or encourage younger girls—daughters, sisters etc.—to understand consent and their right to refuse unwelcome behaviour?

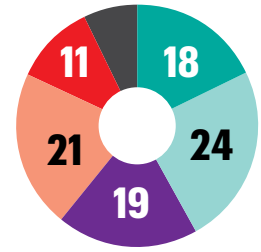

Q. In your experience or perception, how effective are POSH mechanisms—such as the Internal Complaints Committee—in addressing workplace sexual harassment?

Q. Are you aware of legal protections and resources for women in cases of consent violations such as sexual harassment laws, including POSH (Prevention of Sexual Harassment at Workplace) Act and Vishaka guidelines, helplines and zero FIR provision?

Q. Do you think that India has become safer for women after the enactment of stricter laws following the 2012 'Nirbhaya' rape case?

Q. Which of these steps will be most effective in curbing crimes against women?

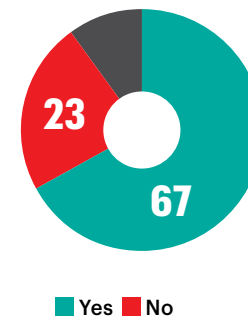

Better parenting, with sons being taught to respect women	65
Harsher punishment	58
Sensitisation of police	36
Fast-track courts	35
Better patrolling	29

Q. Who should play the biggest role in building a consent culture in India?

Families	58
Schools and colleges	54
Law and policy	46
Media and influencers	40
All of the above	42

42% believe the post-Nirbhaya legal reforms improved women's safety significantly or somewhat

Q. Do you believe that institutions like police, courts, women's commissions adequately uphold and protect women's consent and choices in India today?

Rest, DK/CS; all figures in %