The family had got into the warehousing and real estate business, and had done well for themselves.

Ketan, who had earned his master's degree from the US, was chief marketing officer of Success Group, the family's real estate firm. The extended family, including father Vishal's two brothers, lived in an upscale, 45-acre gated community at Gahunje, off the arterial Mumbai-Pune expressway. Grandfather Devichand, who was suffering from a terminal illness, is said to have doted on Ketan, the most educated of his grandchildren, and wanted to see him married off in his lifetime, the reason the Agarwals were eager to find a bride for him. (Shattered by the turn of events, Devichand died on July 4).

According to Siya's relatives, the marriage talks briefly stalled when it was revealed that the boy was balding and used a hair patch, and also had a slight stutter. Siya, who was educated in an elite school in Pune, is said to have dropped out of a reputed city college after failing Standard XII. A keen baker, she was running a patisserie business from home. After checking Ketan's profile online and meeting him, matters were smoothed out and the two families got together for a glitzy engagement party at a 5-star hotel in Pune on February 19. Photographs from the engagement ceremony and subsequent videos now surfacing on social media show the couple beaming. The marriage was planned for November, at a resort in Udaipur, Rajasthan. "There was no indication she was unhappy with the match," says Krishnakumar Goyal, president of the Agarwal Samaj Federation's Pune chapter and a common acquaintance of the two families. Siya would visit her future in-laws and bring cakes and bouquets, he adds.
