WING

(NO 2 ON ASIA'S 50 BEST LIST; 2 MICHELIN STARS)

What started as Vicky Cheng's hush hush, midnight tasting sessions at his innovative Hong Kong restaurant Vea, has flourished into 'Wing', a boundary breaking Chinese fine dining experience. Located just one floor below its predecessor, Wing is Cheng's homage to Chinese culinary heritage, an intersection between tradition and fearless reinvention. Initially known for his French classical chops developed over two decades, Cheng's return to Hong Kong ignited a passion to reinterpret his roots in bold, ways that blurred boundaries. Wing's seasonal tasting menu offers diners two options: a concise version, or an extended journey featuring premium ingredients and an extra course. Among the stars of the kitchen is the 'dry aged crispy Cantonese chicken', a dish Cheng spent over 80 trials perfecting. Its skin is a golden, wafer thin crunch that gives way to succulent, flavour-packed meat, elevated by nuanced seasoning that is nod to centuries-old techniques, while feeling entirely new. Smoked pigeon takes an unexpected turn with sugarcane, while a braised sea cucumber masquerades as pork belly, tucked into the crunch of a puffed spring roll. Each bite feels like unearthing a forgotten story, retold through Cheng's contemporary lens. Desserts break traditional moulds, ending instead with Wing's famous 'fruit trolley service', showcasing treasures like Guangxi kumquats eaten whole, intensely fragrant Hainan mangoes, and aromatic Japanese strawberries.
