ON GRANDFATHER DUTY

When a grandson makes demands, even a chief minister has little choice but to comply. Telangana CM Revanth Reddy turned cook at his Banjara Hills residence earlier this month after three-year-old grandson Reyansh insisted that he would have pooris, but only if they were made by grandpa. Setting aside his packed schedule, the CM made his way to the kitchen and dished out a dozen rather uneven pooris as Reyansh watched, offering instructions. The family moment was later shared by Revanth on social media. Meanwhile, bitter rival and ex-CM K. Chandrasekhar Rao was also on grandfather duty. The Bharat Rashtra Samithi (BRS) chief has been largely confined to his Erravelli farmhouse since the 2023 election defeat, but rushed to Hyderabad after grandson Himanshu, 21, suffered a minor sports injury. It seems family is topmost on the mind for Telangana's top two political rivals, especially when it comes to their grandkids.

PLANTING IDEAS

Union home minister and Gandhinagar MP Amit Shah has set an unusually ambitious target for his constituency: make it the greenest in the country. This is less an aspiration than a declared mission. BJP sources say around 12.5 million saplings have reached Gandhinagar this year, of which 6 million will be planted under Van Kavach, Gujarat's version of Japan's dense Miyawaki afforestation model. The plantations will cover 82 sites spread across 600 hectares, including a 100-hectare Maha Van Kavach. Next year, the Gujarat forest department plans to develop Van Kavach plantations across 1,100 hectares in the state, including another 600 hectares in Shah's Lok Sabha constituency.
