

Rynsan

Indigenous cuisines of Meghalayan tribes—Khasi, Garo and Jaintia—get a modern twist in this intimate, casually elegant restaurant that's been a hit since they opened their doors in 2022. Tucked away in a traditional Assam-type bungalow, Rynsan (meaning 'platform' in Khasi) is the brainchild of Khasi musician Hammarsing Kharhmar and wife Riyaki Jana. "Rynsan has quickly become the one place I recommend to everyone visiting Shillong. While their experiments with local ingredients and methods of cooking have made our food more accessible for those visiting, for locals like me, it's interesting to see these new interpretations. Their dishes are truly unique and often, even surprise me," says designer and entrepreneur Iba Mallai. High on her list of favourites is Syrwa Pashor (banana blossom soup), Jaiur Wings (chicken wings tossed with local Sichuan peppers), Wild Perilla Pasta and Nei ïong (Black Sesame) Panna Cotta. Meals always start with a complimentary platter of local greens that include jamyrdoh (fish mint), wild coriander and jyllang (garlic chives); and can be accompanied by fiery chutneys and pickles—an integral part of indigenous meals—which range from smoked chicken chutney to Mizo bamboo shoot pickle.

Address: Laitumkhrah, near Shillong College

