

Bundelkhand is scripting a new story of development. The robust infrastructure created by the double-engine government is taking the Bundelkhand region to new heights of growth and progress.

now being promoted as a sustainable alternative for the region. The Yogi Government has expanded natural farming across 94,300 hectares in Uttar Pradesh, with Bundelkhand receiving special priority. A dedicated programme for cow-based natural farming is being implemented across all seven districts of the region, covering 23,500 hectares of land. The objective of natural farming is to reduce dependence on chemical fertilisers and pesticides. This approach lowers cultivation costs, improves soil fertility, and strengthens environmental sustainability. The government believes that natural farming can emerge as a more resilient and sustainable agricultural model for water-stressed regions such as Bundelkhand.

Better market access for farmers

For decades, one of the biggest challenges faced by farmers in Bundelkhand has been securing better markets and fair prices for their produce. The government is now seeking to transform this situation by strengthening Farmer Producer Organisations (FPOs). Shri Khatu Shyam Ji Farmer Producer Company Limited, located in Chirgaon, Jhansi, has received AGMARK certification in the cereals and spices category. It is the first FPO in the Jhansi Division to receive this quality certification for its products. Nearly 300 farmers are associated with the FPO, which is currently producing items such as turmeric, coriander, chilli, and poha. The AGMARK certification is expected to provide these products with greater market recognition and consumer trust, thereby enhancing farmers' income prospects. This initiative reflects the government's focus not only on increasing agricultural production but also on connecting farmers with value addition, quality assurance, and product branding.

Expanding employment opportunities

Migration has long been one of Bundelkhand's most pressing challenges. Due to limited employment opportunities, a large number of young people were compelled to migrate to metropolitan cities in search of livelihoods. However, since the construction of the Bundelkhand Expressway, trade and industrial activity across the region's districts have gained momentum. The creation of thousands of employment opportunities has benefited local youth significantly. Today, industrial investments, the Defence Corridor, logistics parks, MSME units, and the expansion of agriculture-based enterprises are generating increasing employment opportunities within the region itself. If the proposed projects are completed within the stipulated timelines, the greatest beneficiaries will be the youth of Bundelkhand, who will gain access to employment and entrepreneurial opportunities closer to home, reducing the need for migration and contributing to the region's long-term economic self-reliance. Bundelkhand's ongoing development story is not merely the story of a region's transformation; it is also an example of efforts to bridge regional imbalances. While basic needs are being addressed through the Jal Jeevan Mission, a long-term economic foundation is simultaneously being built through industrial development, defence manufacturing, logistics infrastructure, and natural farming.
