

The double-engine government has advanced healthcare on a priority basis across the state. Essential health services are now being delivered even to those regions where such facilities were previously unavailable.

Yogi Adityanath,
Chief Minister

Christian Medical College, Vellore. Under the Tele-ICU system, SGPGI has been connected with six medical colleges, enabling critically ill patients to receive expert guidance without delay. In addition, teleradiology services are being operated at 227 Community Health Centres across the state. More than 41.45 lakh patients have benefited from this facility so far. Alongside modern medicine, the Yogi Government has accorded equal importance to strengthening AYUSH systems of healthcare. The state currently operates 2,111 Ayurvedic hospitals, 254 Unani hospitals, and more than 1,585 Homoeopathic hospitals. In addition, eight Ayurvedic colleges, two Unani colleges, and nine Homoeopathic colleges along with their affiliated hospitals are functioning across the state. A Government Ayurvedic College has been established in Ayodhya, while a Government Homoeopathic Medical College has been set up in Varanasi. The establishment of Mahayogi Guru Gorakhnath AYUSH University and the decision to constitute an AYUSH Board are being regarded as significant steps towards providing institutional strength to AYUSH healthcare. Fifty-bed Integrated AYUSH Hospitals are being operated in 16 districts, benefiting approximately 6.7 lakh patients during 2024-25.

Nursing and emergency services emerge as key strengths

The quality of healthcare services depends not only on doctors but also on a well-trained nursing and paramedical workforce. Keeping this in view, construction of 31 nursing colleges is currently underway across the state. Under Mission Niramaya, several initiatives, including a mentor-mentee model, are being implemented to improve the quality of nursing and paramedical institutions. Nursing education capacity has been expanded by 7,000 seats, while 2,000 additional seats have been created in the paramedical sector. Furthermore, 35 ANM training centres that had remained closed for years have been revived and made operational once again. To strengthen emergency healthcare services, the ambulance network has also been expanded extensively. More than four crore people have benefited from the 108 Ambulance Service so far.

At present, Uttar Pradesh operates 250 Advanced Life Support (ALS) ambulances, 2,270 National Ambulance Service vehicles, and more than 2,200 ambulances under the 108 service. The number of ALS ambulances has been increased from 125 to 375. To enhance operational efficiency, there has also been a notable increase in the number of daily trips and the distance covered by ambulances, ensuring timely access to medical assistance for patients. The most significant social dimension of the Yogi Government's healthcare policy is the provision of financial protection to poor and underprivileged families. Today, more than nine crore people in the state are covered under a free health protection scheme of up to ₹5 lakh. Under the Pradhan Mantri Jan Arogya Yojana, 7.34 crore people are benefiting from healthcare coverage, while under the Mukhyamantri Jan Arogya Abhiyan, nearly 1.50 crore people from 50.64 lakh families are covered under free medical insurance. Through these schemes, approximately 81.55 lakh patients have received free treatment worth nearly ₹13,353 crore across the state so far.