Tapestry of Threads and Traditions

When a fashion designer creates a special line for a home furnishings giant, it turns spaces into love letters to Indian nostalgia

By RIDHI KALE

The most luxurious thing a room can host is memory. Confused? Today's homeowners are rejecting meaningless decoration for deep cultural storytelling. Leading this is a collaboration between myTrident and couturier Karan Torani. The coming together could have meant just a simple extension of both the brands. However, in a happy twist Torani's stepping across the threshold of high fashion into home décor with myTrident not only celebrates maximalism but also turns traditional motifs into a thing of beauty.

Indian by Design

To understand this collection, believes Torani, one must understand the nostalgia of growing up in India. Therefore the design house has replaced fast-moving trends with a timeless heritage look. The textiles draw inspiration from familiar sensory memories, such as the quiet mood of evening musical mehfils and the slow, warm air of childhood summers. Torani explains that these are not just fabrics to drape over furniture, but family stories captured in thread.
