feel the cosiness and warmth. It has completely changed how we think about displaying design." Instead of rows of disconnected sofas and endless dining tables, the villa is broken into curated, fully realised rooms. The vision is seamless, a customer should be able to walk into a bedroom or living setup, feel the layout and simply ask for the entire space to be packed up and shipped to their doorstep.

Relaxed Elegance

The Goa collection is an aesthetic designed not just for the Goan coast, but for holiday homes anywhere in the world. The focus has shifted heavily toward Indian craftsmanship, indoor-outdoor versatility and rich, handcrafted detailing. Yet, fans of the brand's original eccentricity won't be completely disappointed. The playfulness is still there, albeit more sophisticated. The undisputed crown jewel of the store is a completely handcrafted statement chair featuring dual, sculpted leopard armrests and a back shaped like a sprawling palm tree. It is fun, classic and beautifully illustrative of the brand's new, mature direction.

Hybrid Hangout

Understanding that the modern consumer views shopping as a leisure activity rather than a chore, the flagship incorporates a fully licensed hybrid space. A beautifully curated coffee house, Jenny's, serves up artisanal brews by day and transitions into a relaxed lounge serving alcohol by evening. It is a deliberate move to strip the stress out of home designing. Visitors are encouraged to lounge, have a drink and ideate their spaces without the pressure of a looming design project.

Decelerating the Price Point

Perhaps the most surprising masterstroke of the launch lies in Jain's commercial strategy. Recognising that a vast majority of their coastal clientele are furnishing second homes, Bent Chair has accordingly adjusted its pricing framework. Despite rolling out from the same factories, maintaining identical quality metrics and craftsmanship, the price points here are marked down by 20 to 25 per cent compared to Delhi.

With this centenary villa, Bent Chair isn't just celebrating 10 years of survival in a fickle industry; they are showcasing a brand that has learned to grow up, quiet down and gracefully adapt to the tides. Trading city chaos for coastal calm, Jain has redefined, recreated and repackaged, art of slow living.
