THE CJP HIERARCHY

ABHIJEET DIPKE | 30 |
Founder and National Convenor

Founder and convenor of the CJP, Dipke studied at the Saraswati Bhuvan school in Chhatrapati Sambhajinagar and spent his holidays in his ancestral village, Santuk Pimpari, where he would roam the fields and herd cattle with his cousins. Dipke took a degree in journalism at the Tilak Maharashtra University in Pune, then studied Public Relations at Boston University. He worked for the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) in college and was part of its social media team during the 2020 Delhi assembly polls. "He did a great job by targeting the BJP," says an AAP leader. "Dipke took some good calls and showed he had the stamina to run a protest for weeks," adds an Opposition party leader.

SAURAV DAS | 26 |
Co-convenor & Spokesperson

An independent investigative journalist and RTI activist from New Delhi, Das studied journalism at Amity University. He now reports on law, governance, the judiciary and institutional transparency. One of the public faces of the movement, Das led parlays with the government along with Ashutosh Ranka. Though he has had no prior links with politics, institutional scrutiny through activism has defined his political identity. That makes him a significant figure in the evolution of the CJP from an online campaign to a national pressure group.

ASHUTOSH RANKA | 32 |
Co-convenor & Spokesperson

The organisational brain of the CJP, Ranka left his consulting job with McKinsey to join youth activism. With degrees in engineering from IIT Kanpur and Public Administration from the London School of Economics, a policy context has influenced his role in framing CJP demands and efforts to expand the Jantar Mantar movement into a debate on governance. Once an AAP volunteer in his native Rajasthan, Ranka says that political parties across India are unable to bring youth issues to the mainstream, while the CJP has been able to hold parties accountable from outside.

AJINKYA SHINDE | 35 |
National Organisation In-charge

Based in Ausa in Maharashtra's Latur, Shinde is among Dipke's closest friends, having stood by him at Jantar Mantar. Raised in Alibag, where his father was a school principal, he trained as an engineer and worked with an IT major in Pune before returning to Ausa. He turned entrepreneur, building a basundi (sweet) brand and a milk-chilling plant, while also mobilising young cultivators around issues such as crop insurance. Known for his organisational acumen, he cut his political teeth in AAP, working in Maharashtra and Goa.

AAFREEN NAWAZ | 34 |
National Secretary

An MBA graduate, Aafreen has worked in operations across mortgage and healthcare sectors and is based in Bengaluru. She joined the CJP as one of its four official spokespersons in June and was among the women who represented the movement during its Jantar Mantar agitation, appearing on television and taking part in public outreach. Less confrontational than some of its other leaders, she has built a strong digital presence, including through her artwork on Instagram, while also helping expand the CJP's presence in Karnataka.
