IEMEN'S A MISSING CAN OF FILM EXPLORES FILMMAKER ZAHIR RAIHAN

alongside Raihan's photo, given Ghatak's engagement with films on India's Partition along Bengal. "[Andrei] Tarkovsky occupies a certain cinema of praxis position within our film schools, and you can see some of those influences in Raihan's angles and shots, including in Anwara," Mohaiemen explains the exhibition's title, recalling the Soviet master filmmaker. "The trio coupling in the title pointed to a possible other film history from the global periphery."

Completing the exhibition is a dual set of prints and drawings—Jamahiriya Means People: Okba Ibn Naafa and Karen's Last Books: Ibsen to Nguyen. The former looks back on his memories of his father while growing up in Gaddafi-era Libya. The latter is his tribute to friend Karen Wentwoth, who died by voluntary euthanasia. Mohaiemen explains the logic of the grouping thus: "It's about the idea of untimely departure, and the difference between choosing your posthumous traces (Karen and Mohaiemen's father) and being denied that possibility (Raihan)." ■
