

BATH AND BEYOND

Here's how smart tech and natural elements are redefining the luxury bathroom experience

Bureau Report

Modern bathroom has transformed into a personalised wellness sanctuary, driven by smart technology, natural materials and a shift toward spa-like experiences at home. We caught up with Nirupam Sahay CEO, Hindware Limited to find out more.

Bathroom remodelling, what homeowners are getting right?
Bathroom renovation has changed in one important way: people no longer wait decades to do it. Increasingly, homeowners now renovate on their own timeline, ahead of any breakage, treating it as a space worth investing in. Basins and faucets are one of the easiest upgrades to make and one of the most visible. Storage and natural light are other areas homeowners are rethinking.

What are the latest tech-savvy launches from the brand?
We believe in technology that works quietly in the background, and a bathroom that looks as good as it performs. The Hindware Italian Collection's Starc Smart Wall-Mount Toilet reflects that shift. It brings automatic flushing, sensor-based seating and remote operation into everyday use, along with personalised heated comfort, features that used to feel like novelties and now feel like basic expectations. Our Thermostatic Diverters, also from the Hindware Italian Collection, take a similar idea in a different direction. Available in 3, 4 and 5-way variants and finished in Gold, Rose Gold or Chrome, they let consumers control temperature and flow precisely across multiple fixtures. Queo's Shilayam Stone Basin Collection takes a similar idea in a different material direction, bringing genuine, one-of-a-kind natural stone into luxury bathrooms, where no two pieces are alike.

What is Hindware's key differentiator in the market?
What sets Hindware apart is not any single product line, but the trust built up over decades in the Indian market. This trust is built on a portfolio spread across three brands, each serving a different homeowner. Hindware is the group's iconic brand, the one most people already associate with, built on decades of consistent quality. Hindware Italian Collection speaks to a distinct group of homeowners—those seeking aspirational design rooted in global sensibilities for upscale homes. Queo is our premium brand, aimed at homeowners who see the bathroom as an extension of their personal style rather than a purely functional space. Together, these three brands let us meet a homeowner wherever they are, whether they want dependable quality, a premium design statement or a lifestyle-led look, without asking them to look outside the group to find it.
