Q. Do residents' associations or housing societies have the right to prohibit certain types of food (such as meat or beef) in individual apartments or common areas?

88% in KERALA are opposed to any ban on food types in their localities; 75% in UTTARAKHAND back the idea*

Yes No
Did not answer

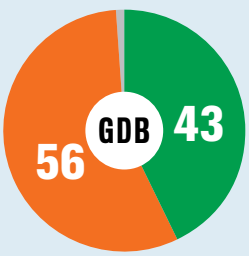

(Figures in percentage)

Q. Should a man and woman be free to marry each other even if they are from different religions?

90% in CHANDIGARH are opposed to inter-religious marriages; 94% in KERALA support them*

Q. Should a man and woman be free to marry each other even if they are from different castes?

91% in CHANDIGARH back inter-caste marriage, while 84% in UTTAR PRADESH are opposed to this idea*

Q. Are you comfortable with people or families from different religions settling in your village or area?

91% in WEST BENGAL are open to having neighbours from different religions, while 72% in UTTARAKHAND oppose the idea*

Q. Does an employer have the right to decide not to employ people from a certain religion?

88% in KERALA oppose religious discrimination in employment opportunities; 51% in UTTAR PRADESH support the idea*

The 'Yes' and 'No' responses in GDB (Gross Domestic Behaviour) have been calculated as the combined percentages of answers–'Yes' (strongly agree and somewhat agree) and 'No' (disagree and somewhat disagree) most rigid social barriers, with high resistance to interfaith unions and a greater tendency to endorse religious discrimination in employment.

The survey offers encouraging news about neighbourhood diversity, with 70 per cent of respondents expressing comfort with neighbours from different faiths. West Bengal leads, with 91 per cent welcoming religious diversity in their communities; Uttarakhand demonstrates the highest resistance, with 72 per cent uncomfortable with such integration.

Perhaps most striking are attitudes toward intermarriage—61 per cent of the respondents oppose interfaith marriages and 56 per cent reject inter-caste marriages. Among states, 94 per cent in Karnataka oppose inter-religion marriages while 84 per cent in UP show resistance to inter-case unions.

In the workplace, 60 per cent of Indians oppose religious discrimination in hiring. Kerala leads, with 88 per cent rejecting an employer's right to discriminate based on religion.

These findings sketch a nuanced portrait of India's path toward inclusion—a journey shaped by regional disparities, reflecting the nation's continuing struggle to balance its pluralistic ideals with deep-seated social divides. ■

For the detailed report, please scan the QR code