imperialist economic and military powers, such as the United States, United Kingdom, Canada, and several others in the core, and poor and underdeveloped countries with abundant natural resources in the periphery countries including but not limited to the DRC, Mozambique, Zambia and others.

South African sub-imperialism is invading Africa through both MNC and foreign-owned MNCs with long-term bases in the country, including companies like Anglo American, De Beers and BHP Billiton which used to be domiciled in SA. There are now also black-owned and black-controlled firms such as African Rainbow Minerals, and some smaller initiatives close to the ruling party and president himself.

BRICS in Mozambique (by Bobby Peek)

In Mozambique, there is a new neo-colonial exploitation underway. It is not Europe or the United States that dominates, but rather countries which are often looked at as rivals, such as Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa. This is a dangerous statement to make but let us consider the facts.

South Africa has been extracting electricity from Mozambique through the Portuguese-developed Cahora Bassa Dam, which has altered permanently the flow of the Zambezi River, resulting in severe flooding on a more frequent basis over the last few years. In the 2013-14 floods, it was reported that a woman gave birth on the rooftop of a clinic. This follows a similar incident in 2000, when Rosita Pedro was born in a tree during severe flooding that year.

South Africa's failing energy utility Eskom is implicated in the further damming of the Zambezi, for it is likely to make a commitment to buy power from the proposed Mpanda Nkuwa Dam just downstream of Cahora Bassa. Most of the cheap energy generated by that dam is fed into a former South African firm, BHP Billiton, at the world's lowest price – but jobs are few and profits are repatriated to the new corporate headquarters in Melbourne, Australia.

After years of extracting onshore gas from near Vilanculos, the South African apartheid-created oil company Sasol is planning to exploit what are some of Africa's largest offshore gas fields, situated off Mozambique, in order to serve South Africa's own export-led growth strategy.

Brazilians are also in Mozambique. Sharing a common language as a result of colonial subjugation by the Portuguese, business in Mozambique is easier for the Brazilians. The result is that the Brazilian company Vale, which is the world's second-largest metals and mining company and one of the largest producers of raw materials globally, has a foothold in the Tete Province of Mozambique between Zimbabwe and Malawi. They are so sensitive about their operations
