3. BRICS from below – grassroots activists whose visions run local to global
   - 3.1 localist: stuck within local or sectoral silos, including myriad momentary 'popcorn protests' (even some against BRICS corporations or projects) that are insurgent, unstrategic, at constant risk of becoming xenophobic, and prone to populist demagoguery
   - 3.2 nationally bound: most civil society activists who are vaguely aware of BRICS and are hostile to it, yet who are so bound up in national and sectoral battles – most of which counteract BRICS' agenda – that they fail to link up even in areas that would serve their interests
   - 3.3 solidaristic-internationalist: 'global justice movement' allies providing solidarity to allies across the BRICS when they are repressed and jointly campaigning for human and ecological rights against common BRICS enemies (such as Vale, the China Development Bank, DBSA, Transnet/mega-shipping, fossil fuel corporations and other polluters, and the coming BRICS Development Bank)

4. pro-West business – most organic intellectuals of business connected to Old Money, multinational-corporate branch plants, northern-centric institutions and political parties, all increasingly worried that BRICS may act as a coherent anti-Western bloc some day (a phenomenon mainly evident in South Africa, given its important unpatriotic bourgeoisie)

The architecture of this book

Thus, two goals were established for this collection. The first is to bring together analyses that prompt debate between social movements, organised labour and other activists in the struggle for social justice and for alternatives to the current international capitalist order; such debate was lively in counter-summits in South Africa in 2013 and Brazil in 2014, and we hope it will continue in coming years as contradictions in the world system and BRICS countries are heightened. BRICS is a new and rather tentative area of concern for many of the anti-neoliberal social movements, but we are confident that the same critical sensibilities will prevail, and that those movements and NGOs which temporarily endorsed the uncritical optimism of BRICS from above will continue reflecting upon the many downsides associated with elite practices. The second goal is to generate critical academic debate involving contemporary themes and theoretical discussions, such as whether BRICS represent cases of sub-imperialism, orthodox neo-developmentalism and what in Latin America is derisively termed 'extractivism'.
