Establishing mutual defence pacts, as in Southern Africa – a pact which has shielded Zimbabwe's radicalisation – would constitute a fundamental building block, as would new forms of regional integration, beyond rule-based, commercial integration, which are yet to emerge.